A MESSAGE FROM THE COMMANDER :

With the cessation of the Korean Air War on 27 July 1953, the mission of the Air Force in Korea switched from an aggressive, fighting role to that of training and preparedness for any eventuality. This has been a challenging task, which we have done well, and of which we are all justly proud.

The enviable record made by our predecessors in the Korean Air War placed the Fourth in first place in enemy aircraft destroyed. The pride in our unit's record has been maintained by establishing a high degree of combat capability. This mission was hampered by the additional requirement to train a number of inexperienced personnel to take over from combat experienced crews. The results achieved have been extremely gratifying, and I am personally proud of the splendid contribution by each of you to make our primary mission so successful. To the pilot, the cook, the clerk, the driver, the adjutant, and to each and everyone of you, goes my thanks and the appreciation of our nation and the United States Air Force for a job well done.

It has been a great pleasure to command the 4th Fighter Interceptor Wing. My association with you has been pleasant and memorable and one that I will never forget. I certainly hope we will serve together again. My best wishes for the future.

History

In November 1950, when the United Nations Forces were grappling in a last ditch holding battle with numerically superior forces of the Communist, airpower was desperately needed. When the Russian built jets appeared in the skies over the battle, and began to make themselves felt, an urgent call went out for a jet comparable to the Russian built MIG-15. The United States Air Force answered with it's finest.....the combat ready F-86 Sabrejet.

The 4th commanded at that time by Colonel, now Brigadier General George F. Smith, packed its bags and within a month the Sabres were destroying the Red Air Force.

Skeptics, who heard that the F-86 was inferior to the MIG-15, were in doubt as to whether it could actually stand up to the MIG in combat. They were in for the surprise of their lives. On 22 December 1950 the Communists sent their highly touted jets across the Yalu to tangle with the Sabres. When the smoke of battle had cleared, the Reds had lost six MIG-15's, 1 probably destroyed, and two damaged. Losses to the 4th, None. This was the first major jet to jet engagement in history. Outnumbered, even on the first day, the 4th proved its merit as a fighting unit.

In the fall of 1943 a group of volunteers from the Royal Air Force Squadron were transferred to the Army Air Corps to form the 4th Fighter Interceptor Group. These Eagle Squadrons, which had distinguished themselves during the "Battle for Britain," continued their brilliant performance in the skies over Europe. The 4th, flying P-47's and later P-51's, wound up as the top scoring fighter group in the theater with 1016 enemy aircraft destroyed.

The unit was deactivated in November 1945 and again reactivated in September 1946, at Selfridge Air Force Base, Michigan. In March 1947, the unit moved to Andrews Air Force Base, Maryland to fly F-80 Shooting Stars. It was then the first active jet fighter unit on the East coast.

In 1949 the 4th moved to Langley Air Force Base, Virginia, where the Sabrejet was received. An overseas movement came in November 1950, just eight days after the first MIG appeared in Korea.

During the year that the 4th was the only Sabrejet outfit in Korea, it out-fought and out-flew the enemy despite continual increase of MIG's in the "Alley."

Most of the jet aces produced from the Korean Conflict came from the 4th. To mention several, we had Major James A. Jabara, the worlds first jet ace, Major Frederick Blesse, Colonel Royal N. Baker, Lt. Col. George A. Davis, Captain Manuel J. Fernandez Jr., Colonel James K. Johnson, Lt. Col. Vermont Garrison, Captain Lonnie Moore, Captain Ralph Parr and Lt. James F. Low.

On 30 November 1951, thirty-one Sabres spotted 12 TU-2 bombers just south of the Yalu River, escorted both by LA-9 propeller driven fighters and MIG-15 jets. Soon the sky was filled with burning and exploding Communist planes. The Sabres had shot down 8 TUs, damaged 3, and also destroyed 3 of the LA-9s, and ONE MIG without losing a single F-86.

On 13 December 1951, the Wing had their greatest victory against the MIG's. The 4th pilots with 50 Sabrejets, met over 100 MIG's in two blazing aerial battles. The results, 12 Enemy planes completely "clobbered," 1 probable, and 3 damaged.

The Wing, on 4 May 1952, demonstrated the extreme versatility of the Sabrejet by dive-bombing, with half-ton high explosive bombs, the Communist airstrip at Sinuiju and the marshalling yard at Kumi-ri.

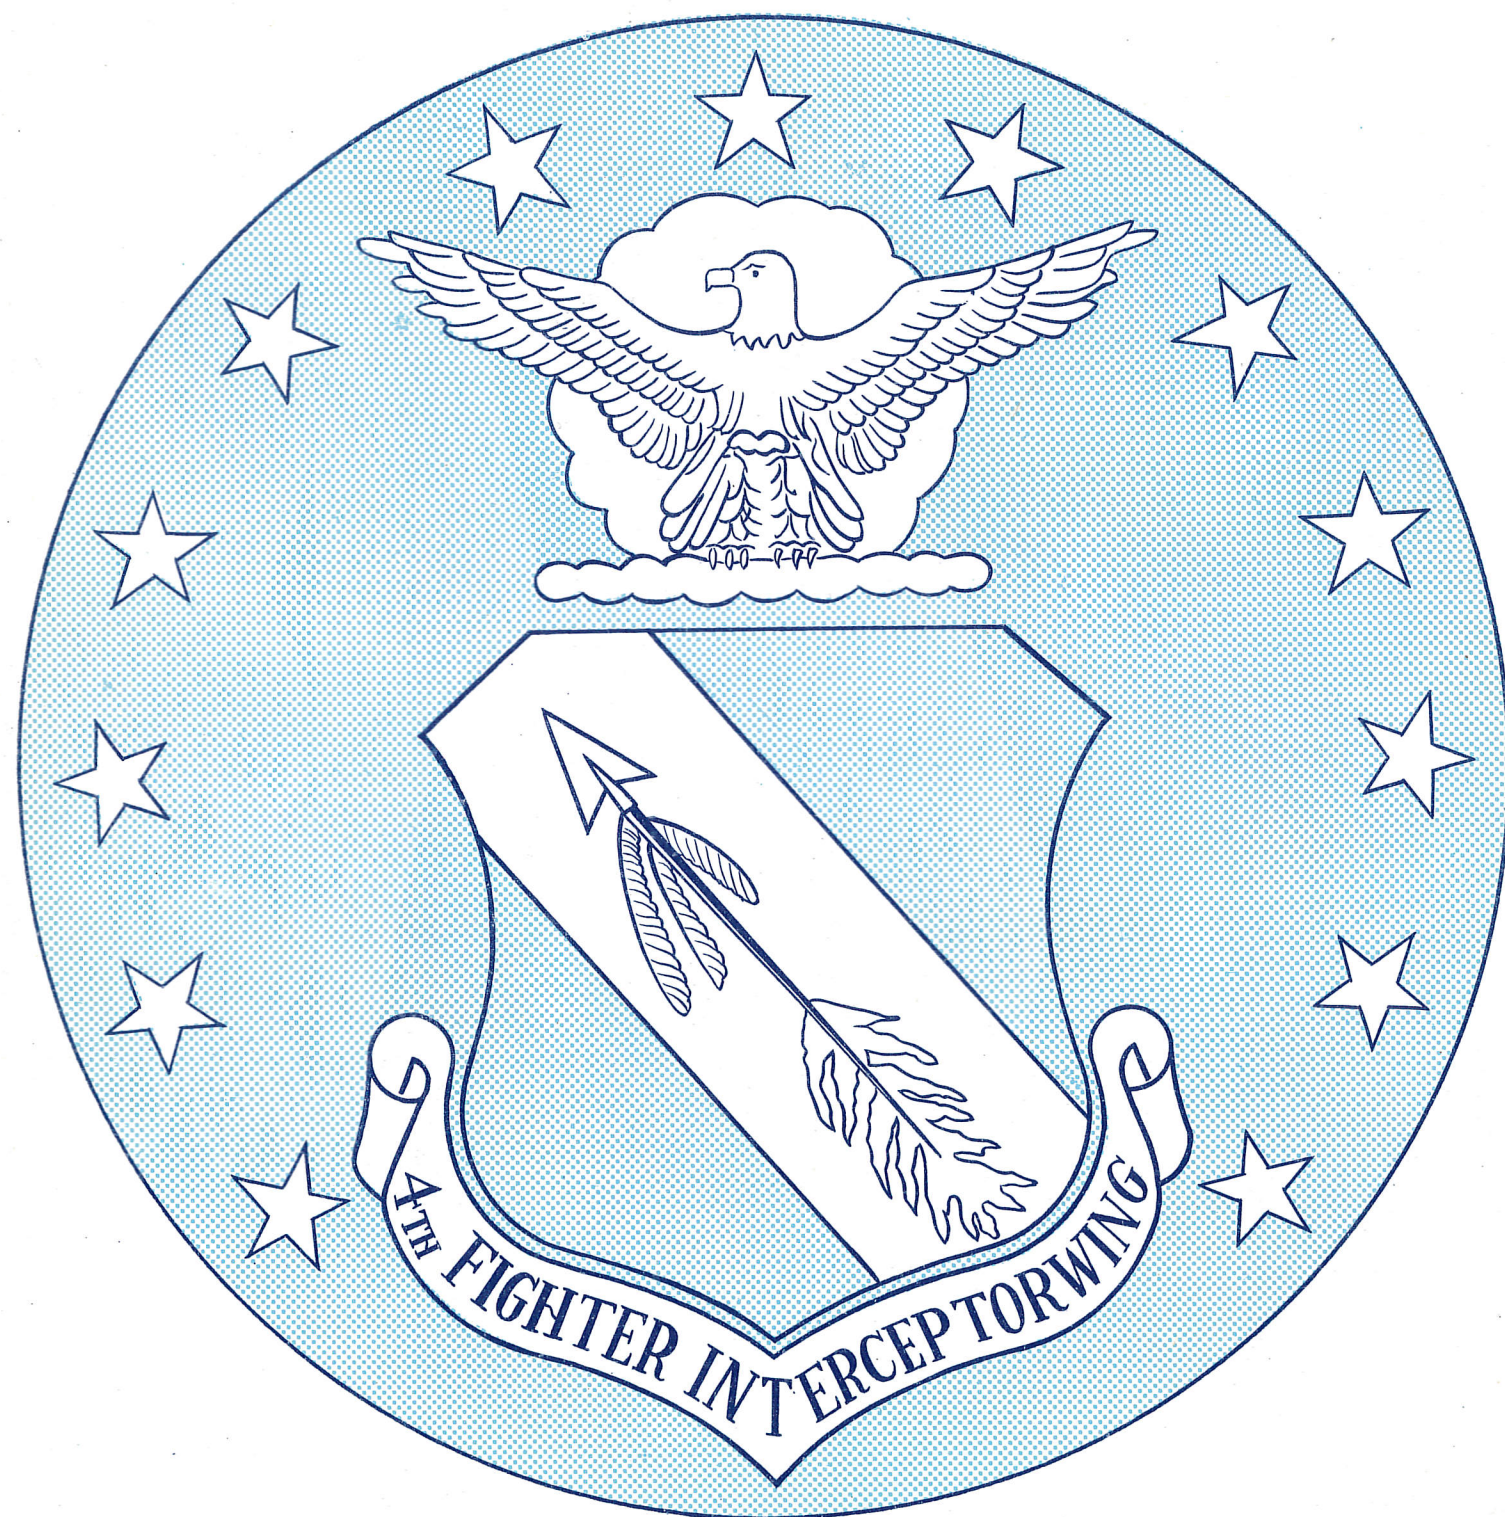

The 4th joined forces with aircraft of other wings and other services, on 23 June 1952, to stage the biggest joint operation of the war in the destruction of the North Korean hydro-electric power dams. The results of this raid caused a loss of ninety per cent of the electrical power in the industrial sections of North Korea.

During the first eight days of August 1952, the 4th's pilots destroyed a total of 17 MIG's. In this same period, only one F-86 was lost although several minor battle damages were sustained.

With end of hostilities late in July, 1953, the 4th Fighter Interceptor Wing turned to a program that would insure combat readiness and continued improvement of the unit and personnel.

The total score for the 4th during the Korean conflict, stands at 506 enemy aircraft destroyed, 84 probably destroyed, and 491 damaged. This score is completely lopsided, extremely impressive, and is a fitting tribute to all who worked to make such an achievement possible.

Wing Headquarters

MISSION... Wing Headquarters consisting of seven staff sections, is the administrative switch board of mission accomplishment. It is from the dissemination of orders issued from this small building in seven lines of coordination that permits rotation of each man, proper assignment of incoming replacements, makes certain every man is paid, assures that project money is properly utilized, and the source of all supply control. It is from here that all operations are governed, all ground and air safety is consistently supervised and inspections monitored. Personal and government legal assistance is readily at hand, and audits are simultaneously written.

FOURTH FIGHTER-INTERCEPTOR GROUP...

MISSION.....The mission of the Fourth Fighter-Interceptor Group is primarily to uphold the National Policy of the government of the United States and to defend the principals of the United Nations. In this theatre of action the mission is to gain and maintain air superiority over North Korea, provide escort or cover for United Nations air, sea and ground forces and to provide air defense. The Group has destroyed over five hundred of the enemy's planes, probably destroyed more than eighty and damaged more than four hundred enemy aircraft during the combat period.

MISSION . . . The mission of the 334th Fighter Interceptor Squadron is to provide and maintain air superiority by the interception and destruction of enemy aircraft, to fly escort or cover for the various United Nations Forces and to defend friendly areas from aggression. To accomplish this end the Pigeon Squadron has engaged in a daily training program to continue to supply the high quality pilots and airmen the 334th has been noted for since its founding as the famous Eagle Squadron of WW II. The unit stands ready and capable to act as the needs of our country may direct.

THE CHIEFS... When the war ended, the 335th had 228½ kills, 26 of which came in June of last year, a record that no other squadron has equaled. The old troops left and new forces were taking their place every day. Our training had to be the best so that we could keep on top, ready to gain and maintain air superiority at any time, any place.

Safety records, high percentage of planes in commission and squadron of the month selections were due to excellent support from all sections of the squadron. Especially the Non-Com, the back-bone of the Air Force, to whom we owe our Success.

THE MISSION... With cessation of hostilities in mid-1953, leaders of the 336th Fighter Interceptor Squadron geared the unit to a new mission: Preserve the combat-born fighting skill. Led by Lt. Col. Edward Weed, the Rocketeers were honed to a razor's edge of combat capability, ready to meet the threat of aggression at the flash of a radar blip. Engineering, Armament, Communications pulling in unison with the rest of the squadron's sections effected a never-sagging proficiency level.

4th MOTOR VEHICLE Squadron

MAJOR NICHOLAS EVANCO
Commander

THE MOTOR VEHICLE SQUADRON . . . As a component of the 4th Maintenance and Supply Group, the 4th Motor Vehicle Squadron is charged with the vital task of providing transportation and maintaining all vehicles for the 4th Fighter Interceptor Wing. Through the combined efforts of the squadron personnel the Flying Fourth was kept rolling on the ground during all kinds of adverse weather conditions. The successful fulfillment of the Wing's mission is due in no small measure to the ability of the Motor Vehicle Squadron in maintaining equipment necessary for starting and refueling the F-86's.
